

AUSTRALIANS AND OUR CHANGING CLIMATE: PAST EXPERIENCES AND FUTURE DESTINY

25 November 1996

The National Academies' Forum, in pursuing its broader objects of promoting closer links with the natural sciences, social sciences and humanities, examined some of the complexities of global change and the public policy options facing Australia. Untangling the causes and effects in order to devise appropriate responses, national and international is a major challenge for all those involved.

Contents

Public policy aspects of climate change

Stuart Harris

A critical review of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC)
– second assessment

Dr John Zillman

A prehistorian's perspective: Aboriginal responses to environmental change

Professor Rhys Jones

Detecting a human influence on climate

Professor David Karoly

Effects of vegetation in climate and atmospheric CO₂ and climatic change –
part 1

Professor Graham Farquhar

Effects of vegetation in climate and atmospheric CO₂ and climatic change –
part 2

Dr Roger Gifford

Effects of climate change on human health

Dr Charles Guest

Greenhouse gases sources and sinks – the globe, developed countries and projections

Mr Ian Galbally

Industry's response to the greenhouse challenge

Professor Greg Tegart

Panel session, comments and discussion